JEFFREY ABRAMSON & MARGARET MIORI TALENT IN THEIR SIGHTS

Designing responses for emerging fashion designers, themselves included, is one of the most exciting jobs in the fashion industry. Jeffrey Abramson and Margaret Miori, founders of the Los Angeles-based design firm, are two of the most talented designers in the city. They have worked with some of the most iconic brands in the industry, including Calvin Klein, Tommy Hilf, and Marc Jacobs. Their work is a blend of creativity and business, and they are always looking for new ways to push the boundaries of fashion design.

VALERJ POBEGA DESIGNING WEARABLE ART

Valerj Pobega is a fashion designer who creates wearable art. His designs are often inspired by nature and the human form. He uses a variety of materials, including silk, cotton, and leather, to create pieces that are both beautiful and functional. Pobega's work is a blend of art and fashion, and he is always looking for new ways to express himself through his designs.

MATTIA BIAGI FINDING ARTISTIC INSPIRATION ON L.A.'S STREETS

Mattia Biagi is a fashion designer who finds inspiration in the streets of Los Angeles. His designs are often inspired by the city's diverse culture and the people who live there. He uses a variety of materials, including silk, cotton, and leather, to create pieces that are both beautiful and functional. Biagi's work is a blend of art and fashion, and he is always looking for new ways to express himself through his designs.

BENJAMIN WALKER CREATING L.A.'S PARTY BEATS

Benjamin Walker is a DJ and producer who has become a household name in Los Angeles. His music is a blend of old school pop and R&B to the latest Daft Punk or house music tracks. Walker has cut his chops not just on the dance floor of major Hollywood clubs but from Long Beach to Pasadena to the Staples Center where he entertained Clippers' fans before games and during tight, halftime sets.

BROOKS COOK DOING GOOD BY LOOKING GOOD

Brooks Cook is a fashion designer who is committed to giving back. He has founded the Brooks Cook Foundation, which provides clothing and financial support to homeless and at-risk youth in Los Angeles. Cook's work is a blend of art and fashion, and he is always looking for new ways to express himself through his designs.

BENJAMIN WALKER CREATING L.A.'S PARTY BEATS

Mixing it up L.A.-style is DJ and producer Benjamin Walker's signature playlist. A music fan from an early age, Walker grew up with the radio always on. After practicing with two turntables and a microphone for years, he dropped into L.A.'s scene by deejaying a Christmas party for a local radio station. "It was horrible," he recalls with a smile.

But from that rough start, Walker's found a way to make it happen for audiences. "You have to be able to play everything for everybody," says the outgoing mixmaster. A terrific DJ set means the ability to get the crowd going. "You have to be internal, and have a sense of what people really want to hear," he explains. In L.A., because of the city's multi-ethnic diversity and audience's wildly divergent musical tastes, that equals a set list that can transition smoothly from old school pop and R&B to the latest Daft Punk or house music tracks.

Walker has cut his chops not just on the dance floor of major Hollywood clubs but from Long Beach to Pasadena to the Staples Center where he entertained Clippers' fans before games and during tight, halftime sets.

His first CD, Walker the Throne just dropped (a shout out to Jay-Z and Kanye West's Watch the Throne) and he hopes to tour with a major act soon (touring with Justin Timberlake is his dream gig). While headliners may be the draw, DJs are truly coming into their own, finds Walker. "The light shines on DJs more than it used to; We're the pre-party and the after-party. We begin and end it."

HEY, MR. DJ

By Eunice Kim | October 1, 2009 | Lifestyle

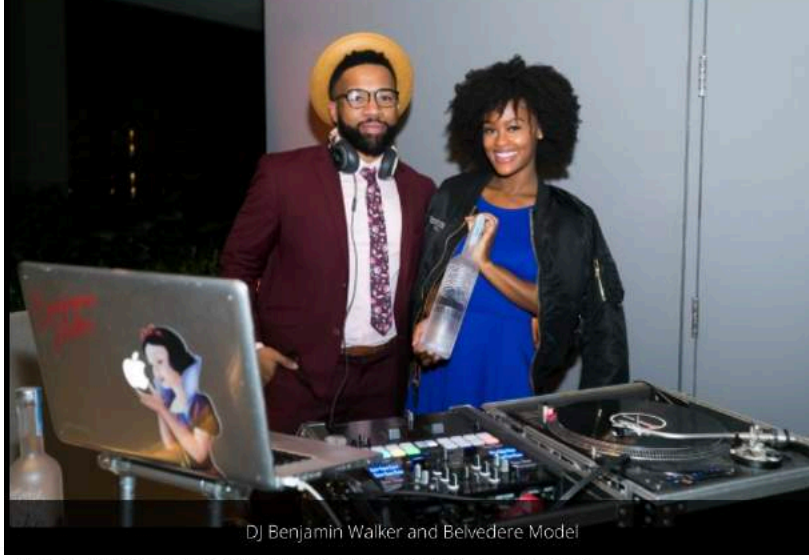

From 10AK in New York City to H.Wood in Hollywood, DJ Benjamin Walker's bumping bass keeps cocktail-fueled partygoers going all night.

Surrounded by music his entire life, Sacramento-born Walker, 26, started out in the music business at the age of 19 and had his own late-night music show on Los Angelesbased radio station The Beat by the time he was 21. That gig helped him quickly land more clients, such as the LA Clippers, clothing store Metropark and hip-hop duo Clipse, who all hired him to deejay high-profile events. Now, five years later, Walker is traveling the world to work for such music industry icons as Kanye West, Tyrese and Pharrell and aspires to start his own DJ-management company.

To what does Walker attribute his meteoric rise? "I like to take risks," he says of his tendency to "genre-bend," mixing old-school classics with today's dance-floor anthems. "Most DJs would be afraid to play Soul for Real [an R&B group] in the club or [reggae album] Here Comes the Hotstepper, but not me," says Walker. "You don't have to play Britney's top-10 hits to be successful."
